Bailey: "I Knew He Was Dying"

By HASKELL SHORT, Press Ohio Bureau Chief

COLUMBUS — Dr. Sam Sheppard, the Bay Village osteopath who figured in one of the nation's most sensational and controversial murder cases, died unexpectedly today in his suburban Columbus home. He was 46.

He had been ill for three days with what Dr. Sheppard himself diagnosed as influenza.

"Last night he was shaking violently. This morning about 7 a.m. he died," said his sobbing bride of six months, the former Colleen Strickland, daughter of Dr. Sheppard's wrestling partner.

"He had been sick a few days," the third Mrs. Sheppard said. "He thought he had the flu or something like that. He had all the symptoms of flu."

FRANKLIN COUNTY CORONER Robert A. Evans said Sheppard had given himself a shot of an unknown drug last night as part of his self treatment.

Relatives said Sheppard died on the floor, twisting in agony, with his mother-in-law trying to save him with mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

Mrs. Strickland said she believed Sheppard had suffered from internal bleeding, saying that she smelled blood when she breathed into his mouth in a desperate effort to save his life.

"He wasn't really himself. He was in another world from taking drugs," she continued. "No, of course I wasn't in love with him any more, I felt sorry for him."

Miss Benson asked her twice if he had ever admitted to her that he killed his first wife, and Ariane snapped "no comment" to each question.
Dr. Sam Sheppard Dies in His Home

"He thought he had the flu but last night he became violently ill and we wrapped him in blankets and kept him lying on the floor," said Mrs. George Strickland.

"He has been drinking some lately but he wasn't on any drugs as far as we knew," she said.

DR. SHEPPARD'S BODY was taken to the Franklin County morgue at Ohio State University for an autopsy. Detectives were at the home of wrestler George Strickland where Sheppard lived and maintained an office. Police said their investigation was routine.

The death immediately raised speculation that Dr. Sheppard may have been a victim of cancer.

His brother, Dr. Stephen Sheppard, had claimed during Dr. Sam's imprisonment for the slaying of his first wife, of which he later was acquitted, that injections given him during voluntary tests on cancer virus may have resulted in Dr. Sam's contracting cancer.

MRS. STRICKLAND, mother of the Dr. Sheppard's young widow said "Sam told us he had cancer because of that."

"He told us at one time he would not live another year when we first got together a year ago."

The pretty, young 20-year-old blond widow described a happy married life after they were married in Mexico last Oct. 21.

"He was an excellent husband in every way. He was so kind, so wonderful. Just three weeks ago, for no reason at all except his love for me, he bought me a little octocot."

IT WAS DURING a trip to California last fall for wrestling matches with Strickland, a Columbus professional wrestler with whom Sheppard became associated last year, that the romance between Sam and Strickland's daughter blossomed, and she became his third wife.

His first wife, the former Marilyn Sheppard, was bledgeoned to death in their Bay Village home on July 4, 1954, a killing that made Sam a household word. They had a son, Chip.

While serving a life sentence for her slaying which he denied he struck up a small romance with blond Ariane Tbenjohanns of Dusseldorf Germany. She came to this country and they were married in July 1964 three days after he was released from prison and ordered a new trial.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE was tempestuous and ended in divorce last year.

But the former Mrs. Sheppard is being consulted by the Strickland family concerning funeral and burial plans for Dr. Sam.

"We have talked with Ariane and his brother Dr. Richard Sheppard about funeral and burial," the mother-in-law said.

Dr. Sheppard went to Columbus to establish a practice after divorce from his second wife.

The young widow of Dr. Sam whose career as a surgeon was broken by his first murder trial and subsequent 10 years in prison said Dr. Sheppard's practice was beginning to grow in the Columbus area.

Before going to Columbus Dr. Sheppard practiced briefly in Youngstown, Ohio at a Youngstown osteopathic hospital. He later resigned from the hospital staff after two malpractice suits were filed against him.

Dr. Sam's death removes another of the central figures in the 1954 murder trial that focused world-wide attention on Cleveland and resulted in the U. S. Supreme Court calling the trial a "Roman carnival."

Others in the dramatic trial who preceded Dr. Sam in death included his mother and father, his attorney and the trial judge.

Survivors include his two brothers Drs. Richard and Stephen Sheppard and his son Samuel H. Jr. (Chip).

Ohio Penitentiary records show that Sheppard was returned from the Marion Correctional Institute, a penitentiary branch, for an examination when his brother, Dr. Stephen Sheppard, claimed Sam may have developed cancer from the tests.

Samples of the sore tissue were examined by Dr. W. H. Walker, chief prison surgeon, on June 24, 1961, and specimens of tissue were also biopsied at Ohio State University Hospital and at Riverside Methodist Hospital in Columbus. Slides also were sent to the Sloan-Kettering Cancer Research Institute in New York, the foundation making the tests.

"MEDICAL EXAMINATION including biopsy of a swollen area in the breast region of inmate Samuel H. Sheppard indicates no evidence of cancer nor any relationship with the cancer project in which inmates participated," the prison report shows.

"The pathology report was consistent with an inflammation of the small ducts in the breast," Corrections Director M. C. Kohnlentz said the record shows.

He said reports of the medical examination, including Dr. Walker's negative finds, were given to the Sheppard family, the same procedure in medical matters followed for any prisoner.

Medical officers reported the swelling in the breast had been aggravated on May 11, 1961, while Sheppard took part in a wrestling match at Marion, where he was a member of the team and an assistant coach.

Ariane Says She Believed "Sheppard Was in Trouble"

Ariane said she plans to fly to Cleveland from Hollywood, Fla. for the funeral. She is currently vacationing there at the home of friends—former Clevelanders Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Eppler.

"HE WAS A VERY tragic figure," she said. "He was a victim of everything that has happened to him for the past 16 years."

"He was a very tragic figure. It doesn't make any difference whether I think he committed murder or not. He just wasn't strong enough to face up to what had happened to him."

"While we were married he took drugs. He took any kind of drugs he could get. I think maybe he was still taking them, but that is something we will have to let the coroner decide."

ARIANE SAID she hadn't heard from Dr. Sheppard for two months.

"I thought that was very strange," she said. "Normally one of the family would bring me news of him. But nobody had heard anything of him. I last saw him the day of the divorce. Of course, he was out of town a lot with his wrestling and he had the new wife."

Ariane received word of her former husband's death early today when Dr. Sheppard's new mother-in-law, Mrs. George Strickland, telephoned her from Columbus.

"She called me right after the rescue squad had left," Ariane said.

"MRS. STRICKLAND discovered that he had died. She and his wife, Coleen, took turns sitting up with him all night."

Ariane would not comment when asked if Sam had ever unlocked the secret of Marilyn Sheppard's death.

"I don't feel I can comment on that," she said. "I might be moved to talk about it later, maybe in a book."
