INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 2498

BY MILENA STERIO*
[November 15, 2019]

Introduction

On November 15, 2019, the United Nations Security Council passed Resolution 2498,¹ which extended the mandate of the previously established Panel of Experts of Somalia by an additional year; the Resolution also expanded the scope of the Panel's inquiry by specifically tasking the Panel to investigate Al-Shabaab's revenue sources and illegal taxation schemes.²

Panel of Experts on Somalia

In Resolution 2444 of November 14, 2018, the Security Council had established a Panel of Experts on Somalia; the Panel was to operate until December 15, 2019.³ The Panel was established at the same time as the existing Somalia and Eritrea Monitoring Group was disbanded; the Monitoring Group had been set up in 2004, through Resolution 1558, to monitor the arms embargo and other sanctions that had been imposed on Somalia.⁴ The original mandate of the Panel was relatively broad and referred to previous Security Council Resolutions: the Panel was to carry out tasks originally given to the Monitoring Group and set forth in Resolution 2060 (2012); such tasks were further updated in Resolutions 2093 (2013), 2182 (2014), 2036 (2012), and 2444 (2018).⁵ Some of the Panel's main tasks included: to monitor and implement various measures imposed on Somalia, such as the arms embargo, travel ban, asset freeze, and charcoal ban; to assess actions taken by Somali authorities to implement the arms embargo regime; to investigate activities, means of transport, seaports, airports, and other facilities used to generate revenues to commit violations of the Somalia arms embargo; to investigate seaport operations in Somalia that may generate revenue for Al-Shabaab; to recommend additional measures to improve overall compliance with the sanctions regime; to provide an assessment of the progress made by the government of Somalia in establishing relevant procedures for the use and storage of weapons by its security forces; and to assist in identifying areas where state capacity could be strengthened to facilitate the implementation of the sanctions regime.⁶ The Panel consisted of six members and was based in Nairobi, Kenya.⁷

Extension of the Panel's Mandate Under Resolution 2498

In Resolution 2498, the Security Council, as stated above, decided to extend the Panel's mandate by an additional year and to expand its tasks to include "conduct[ing] an analysis of all of Al-Shabaab's revenue sources, their methods of storage and transfer, and mapping of illegal taxation systems."⁸ The expansion of the Panel's mandate has been explained by the Security Council Member States as necessary to support and extend the existing sanctions regime, as well as to "curb the main threat to security in Somali [sic] that is Al-Shabaab."⁹ In addition, the extended mandate for the Panel, requiring the latter to investigate Al-Shabaab's revenue sources, was likely necessitated by the Panel of Experts on Somalia's Report to the Security Council Committee, submitted on November 1, 2019.¹⁰ In the Report, the Panel of Experts concluded that Al-Shabaab "remains the most immediate threat to peace and security in Somalia."¹¹ More specifically, the Report provided evidence that Al-Shabaab was manufacturing homemade explosive devices and using them to carry out an unprecedented number of attacks, and that Al-Shabaab's revenue generation had new sources, such as the taxation of imports into the port of Mogadishu.¹² The latter conclusion may have prompted Security Council Member States to expand the Panel of Experts' mandate in order to request that they investigate Al-Shabaab's revenue sources.

According to the Report, Al-Shabaab has likely expanded its ability to generate revenue sources, as the group has infiltrated Mogadishu's port institutions and other commercial shipping agents within the city.¹³ As noted in the Report, in April 2019, Al-Shabaab contacted business owners in Mogadishu to inform them that all imports into Mogadishu port would be subject to taxation by the group.¹⁴ In addition, the Report notes Al-Shabaab's continuous ability to generate revenue even in areas not physically controlled by the group, due to the group's ability to infiltrate government institutions and to provide relief to local populations in places where the Somali government is inefficient.¹⁵ In areas where Al-Shabaab does not exercise physical control, the group functions as a shadow government and “routinely taxes trade, livestock and agricultural production through a series of checkpoints.”¹⁶ The Report also emphasizes that Al-Shabaab continues to take advantage of Somalia’s unregulated mobile money and domestic banking services, in order to collect and transfer revenue within Somalia.¹⁷ The Report establishes that Al-Shabaab remains a powerful threat to regional peace and security, which is evidenced by the group’s attack on a hotel complex in Nairobi, Kenya, on January 15, 2019, in which 21 individuals died.¹⁸ The Panel’s investigation into this attack also revealed the existence of Al-Shabaab’s network in the region and its aim of kidnapping foreign nationals.¹⁹ According to the Report, Al-Shabaab controls and finances several “cells” in Kenya and Tanzania, and approximately $100,000 has been transferred by Al-Shabaab operatives in Somalia to four cells based in different East African countries.²⁰

In light of such strong conclusions from the Panel of Experts that Al-Shabaab continues to pose a significant regional threat, and that the group has expanded its revenue sources, it is unsurprising that the Security Council, in Resolution 2498, decided to direct the Panel of Experts’ attention to Al-Shabaab financing. It is also worth noting that the Security Council had in the past passed resolutions aimed at suppressing the financing of terrorist acts. In particular, on March 28, 2019, the Security Council passed Resolution 2462 on Countering the Financing of Terrorism, which “pulls together previous resolutions to create a consolidated document that also covers several key emerging issues” and calls upon the United Nations Office of Counter-Terrorism to “play a leading role in identifying ways to suppress terrorist financing.”²¹ Resolution 2498, directed inter alia at investigating Al-Shabaab’s revenue sources, falls squarely within the Security Council’s recent focus on the suppression of terrorism financing.

Conclusion

While Resolution 2498 seems to have resulted from relative consensus within the Security Council that Al-Shabaab poses a significant threat in the region and that its financing requires serious investigation, it is important to note that supporters of the current Somali government perceive this Resolution as a threat to Somali existence as a nation-state and a neocolonial encroachment of its sovereignty.²² Somali United Nations Ambassador Abukar Dahir Osman called for the lifting of “outdated” sanctions against Somalia and expressed concern that the Panel of Experts’ investigations “will not properly address the root causes of the problem.”²³ Instead, Ambassador Osman encouraged Somalia’s partners to invest in rebuilding the government’s capacity to control its borders and the flow of foreign fighters and illegal weapons.²⁴ Despite the Somali government’s opposition to the Panel of Experts’ investigation and expanded mandate, it appears that the Security Council Member States support the Panel and believe it should expand its work to investigate Al-Shabaab’s sources of revenue, with the more general goal of issuing recommendations regarding ways to suppress this terrorist group’s financing.
